From the LONDON MAGAZINE for June, 1748.

AS the insurrections in Holland, and the alteration thereby occasion'd, is one of the most important occurences since our last, we shall begin with an account of that affair. A part of the publick revenue of the united provinces was raised by small duties or taxes, call'd pachts in Dutch, upon almost all the necessaries of life: These pachts were farmed out to private men, who for that reason were called pachters, and who were impowered by law to raise and collect them by their own officers, of whom they kept a great number in daily pay, besides a good many informers; and as they generally had good bargains, they not only grew rich, but lived in a more sumptuous manner than most private men were able to do, which raised both the envy and jealousy of the people in every one of the seven provinces. The populace in the province of Groningen were the first that began, about the end of last month, to appear in a tumultuous manner against these pachters, and to demand an abolition of all these duties as well as a redress of some other grievances. In this province the states were so wise as to prevent any fatal consequences by an immediate compliance with the demands of the populace; but the states of Friesland being a little more obstinate, the tumults of the populace in that country came to a greater height, especially as they had not yet settled the stadtholdership, in the same manner as it had been settled by most of the other provinces. The mob not only plundered and demolished all the houses of the pachters in that province, but also the houses of some of those gentlemen who were thought averse to any alteration in the government: so that the states were at last obliged to comply with all their demands, which consisted of 14 articles, the chief of which were, 1st, That the stadtholdership and succession thereunto should be established in the family of Orange, as it was in most of the other provinces, 2dly, That all the farms of the country and cities should be so abolished as never to be re-established. 3dly, That a commission should be appointed to examine into the state of finances and treasury of the province; another for abolishing certain superfluous employments, and diminishing the appointments of others, and their power to extend to military as well as civil employments; and a third, to examine the book of suffrages or poll-book, and to reform all abuses therein. The populace of the province of Utrecht began likewise to shew the same tumultuous spirit; but the states prevented their committing any violence, by a ready compliance with their demands. At last the infection reached the province of Holland, where the states thought to have prevented any violent proceedings, by a sort of dehortatory proclamation, setting forth the inconveniencies that would attend the abolition of the taxes, and threatening the refractory with severe punishment; but this had a quite contrary effect, for the mob rose at Haarlem, Amsterdam, Leyden, and the Hague, and were more outrageous than they had been any where else; and as they were fired upon by the burghers both at Amsterdam and the Hague, a great many were killed, wounded, trod to death, or drowned in the canals, which redoubled their fury, so that the houses and goods of every one of the pachters in or about all those places were utterly demolished, and much worse consequences might have ensued, if it had not been for the seasonable speech made on that occasion by the Prince of Orange to the states of Holland and West-friesland, and their resolution thereupon, to abolish all the farms, and to contrive some other methods for supplying the deficiency thereby occasioned in the publick revenue; which will of course greatly add to the power and influence of his serene highness, as all those pachters were the favourites or relations of the party opposite to him; and the new officers to be appointed, as some may be, for raising and collecting any new taxes that may be imposed, will all be of his nomination.

Stockholm, May 25. To the Declaration of the English Minister at this Court [See our Gazette No. 754] Count Teſſin has made the following Answer: 'The King, Sir, does not know what you mean by the indecent and unusual Term of Indignities committed against the Character you are invested with: And as to the grievances, his Majesty imagines he has already explain'd himself to your Court on that Head in a satisfactory Manner. As to the rest, since it is natural that you should follow the Tenor of the Orders you have received, and as we are unwilling to be charged with giving any Obstruction to your Compliance with them, you will receive herewith the Passports you desired. You are very sensible the King's Moderation springs solely from his Regard for your Court. His Majesty, Sir, has commanded me to acquaint you in his Name, that he will never confound the Consideration he bears to his Britannick Majesty and the English Nation, with the just Complaints which he has been obliged to make against your Conduct and Proceedings during your Stay here; and that he will always receive with the Regard due to the King your Master, the Person whom his Britannick Majesty shall think fit to nominate to reside here in your Room.

Homburg, May 31. They write from Stockholm, that the Court seems very much discontented at the Departure of the British Minister without taking his Leave; and 'tis said, that the Prime Minister Count Teſſin, has ordered a very large Account to be drawn up of the Disputes that have happened with the said Minister; to which will be added, an Appendix of Proofs; and it is thought that same will be sent to all the Courts in which the Crown of Sweden has any Minister constantly resident.

LONDON, June 11.

The French are buying all the Ships of Force they can lay their Hands on; and Yesterday they purchased of the Owners, at a considerable Price, the Duke Privateer, which has been so successful in many Cruizes against them.

June 23. Letters from Paris mention the Arrival of many Persons of Distinction from England at Versailles, to see the French Court; and that the French Ports in the Channel and in the Ocean are already filled with English Ships.

Within a few Days past, 120,000 Quarters of Corn have been shipped on board for France, from the Port of London.

July 5. On Tuesday next the Earl of Cromartie will set out for the Place of his Residence for Life, in Devonshire.

July 7. Yesterday the Rev. Mr. Whitefield, who arrived in Town on Monday last, preach'd at St. Bartholomew's the Great, near West-Smithfield, which drew together a great Number of People of all sorts.

Extract of a Letter from Aix-la-Chapelle, July 5.

"The Scruple of Spain with Regard to the Preliminaries, was not so much upon the Article of the Reversion of the Dutchies of Parma, Placentia, and Guastalla, as upon the Article whereby the English acquire certain Rights and Privileges in the West-India Trade. But this Scruple has been removed by the French Ministry, who have promised an Equivalent to which England will not be averse."

July 19. On Monday the 11th, her Grace the Dutchess of Newcastle landed at Calais on her Journey to the South of France; on her Landing the great Guns were fired from the Ramparts, and part of the Garison were drawn out under Arms, and lin'd the Streets to her Lodgings, near which, in the Market-Place, several more Cannon were drawn out and fir'd, and a Guard was placed at her Lodging to do Duty during her Stay there.

On

On Wednesday Thomas Anson, Esq; and several other English Gentlemen, arrived in Town from Holland; they came by the Way of Calais, and were much surprized at the great Respect the French paid them in all Places thro' which they pass'd in the Territories of France.

BOSTON, September 12.

Extract from an Act lately passed at Barbados, to ascertain the Dimentions of Boards, Plank, Staves, Shingles, &c.

'All Boards under 1 Inch thick, all Pipe Staves under 5 feet and six Inches long, one Inch thick, and four Inches broad; all Staves of white and red Oak, under three feet and a half long, four Inches broad, and half an Inch thick, all Deal Plank under two Inches thick, all Shingles under eighteen Inches and a half long, five Inches broad, and half an Inch thick, without any Sap; and all white Oak Heading under two feet and six Inches long, six Inches broad, and one Inch thick, and also all Boards, Plank or Joist which shall be found to be mark'd with a false Measure, or Bundles of Shingles false number'd, are to be seiz'd and forfeited in the manner mentioned in the said Act.'

'Tis said they have lately passed another excellent and necessary Law at Barbados, to prevent Gaming of any Sort, or even Cock-fighting, and that they are very strict in the Execution of all their Laws which is greatly to their Praise, as well as their Benefit; but whether it will be in their Power to make People honest, who have all their Lives long been used to cheat, as 'tis too well known the Chip-Makers and many others have, is very much questioned.

NEW-YORK, August 29.

Capt. Arrowsmith, who arrived her on Thursday last in 36 Days from Madeira, informs us, That a few Days before he sailed from that Place, Capt. Foster, of Plymouth, was arrived there from Fyal, with certain Advice, That Capt Freeman, in a Letter of Mark Ship belonging to Boston, bound to London, of about 16 Carriage Guns, and near 40 Men, had taken and carried in there a Spanish Register Ship with 160 Chests of Silver, and one Chest of Gold register'd, tho' 'tis supposed she has much more on board, which they took in the Night by Surprize: she mounted 36 Carriage Guns, and had about 150 Men on board, and mistaking Capt. Freeman for an English 50 Gun Ship, struck at the first Gun; Capt. Freeman ordered the most of her Men on board him, secured them as fast as they arrived, and then sent some of his Men to take Possession of her; which they did without Resistance. Upon Capt. Freeman's Arrival at Fyal, the Portuguese confin'd him in close Prison for two Days; but upon applying to Capt. Foster to go home to Lisbon, to acquaint the King of Portugal of the Usage he had received, they immediately dismiss'd him: Several of Capt. Foster's Men had been paid 10 Pieces of Eight per Night, as a Guard over the Prize; and his Majesty's Ship Rainbow, of 40 Guns then being at Madeira, it was supposed she would go to Fyal to convoy Capt. Freeman and his Prize home to Boston.
